

Türkiye Parazitoloji Dergisi

TURKISH JOURNAL OF PARASITOLOGY

EDITORIAL

This second issue of 2012 includes 11 original research articles, 2 case reports, 2 review articles and 2 letters to the editor. A recent increase in research projects conducted on arthropods and the diseases they cause in humans and animals is visible in our country. Climate changes and related environmental and human behavioral changes with regard to possible threats in the near future, have caused an increase in interest in vectors and diseases transmitted by vectors in different regions of world, especially in Europe. Progress parallel to this and an increasing number of related research in our country is pleasing for us.

With the expectation of receiving more Letters to the Editor, which are an index of the attention our published articles receive, I present my respects and hope that this issue will be useful to your scientific researches and archives
